Francois Keller lives a simple life in the capital of France under the Pont Marie, next to which is the home of his wife. Keller, whose nickname means “doc”, is a man who is a victim. What he fears is the water, what he needs is a bath. Two years ago an event that changed his life took place at a location near which a Belgian barge was situated. What is interesting is that Maigret, a man to whom many witness speak, doesn't fully understand Keller. The thing that Maigret is sad about is Keller's desire to remain silent.
